Consider the following organizations:

Museums and library special archives – these are where newspapers and other resources are often preserved for future study. Your donation can last a very long time.

The Antique Pattern Library project is an excellent opportunity to support access to publications similar to this one. This service provides scans of craft pattern publications that are in the public domain or have permission to post. Many are edited for ease of viewing by modern craftworkers and their technologies, <http://www.antiquepatternlibrary.org/index.htm>

Donations to your local library or a community college or other learning scholarship fund are valuable local investments.

Consider also Archive.org as it helps makes many resources available to all of us. I would be surprised if any person or organization returns even a nominal donation. -H

Sources of Inspiration

All but four patterns in this collection of some 800 small patterns are charted versions of crossword puzzles that were published in the Washington, D.C. newspaper, the Evening Star (ISSN: 83045462). So one may ask, what do embroidery patterns have to do with newspapers? Don't newspapers report on politics, current events, and sports? They mostly do today.

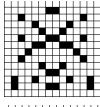

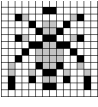

However, newspapers have existed for a very long time and like anything else, they have experienced some change. Two thousand years ago in Rome, Julius Caesar authorized the publication of a newspaper to keep the citizens informed. The Acta Diura began in 69 C.E. to provide reports on government activities. Also included were some notes on crime, sports, and notices of important births, marriages, and deaths. Each edition, a limited single sheet run was copied out by scribes so this newspaper could be posted in a public location. Together with access to paper, the printing press with the innovation of movable type, advanced newspapers into their modern form. As early as 1605, the first printed weekly newspaper to be published was Relation aller Furnemmen und gedenckwürdigen Historien (Collection of all Distinguished and Commemorable News).

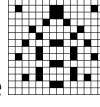

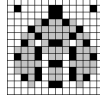

It took until the middle of the 1800s for illustrations to become a relatively common addition to newspapers. The blocks that held the image were still being hand carved into wood or etched into metal plates. These plates were expensive to produce because of the labor and skill that they required. However, advertiser and consumer expectations began to influence the drive to improve the technology of image reproduction. Within just fifty years, halftone reproductions of photographs were common.

At the beginning of the 20th century, the new durability of illustration plates allowed news corporations to send these plates to their outlets in various cities. This reduction in production costs opened opportunities for more special interest columns and features. Thus, the advent of leisure and "women's" newspaper sections came about. The marketing to this new audience tended to focus on household interests, home maintenance suggestions, food preparation, needlecrafts, and so on. Slowly puzzles and games were introduced into the papers. About the 1920s, crossword puzzles were more commonly included.

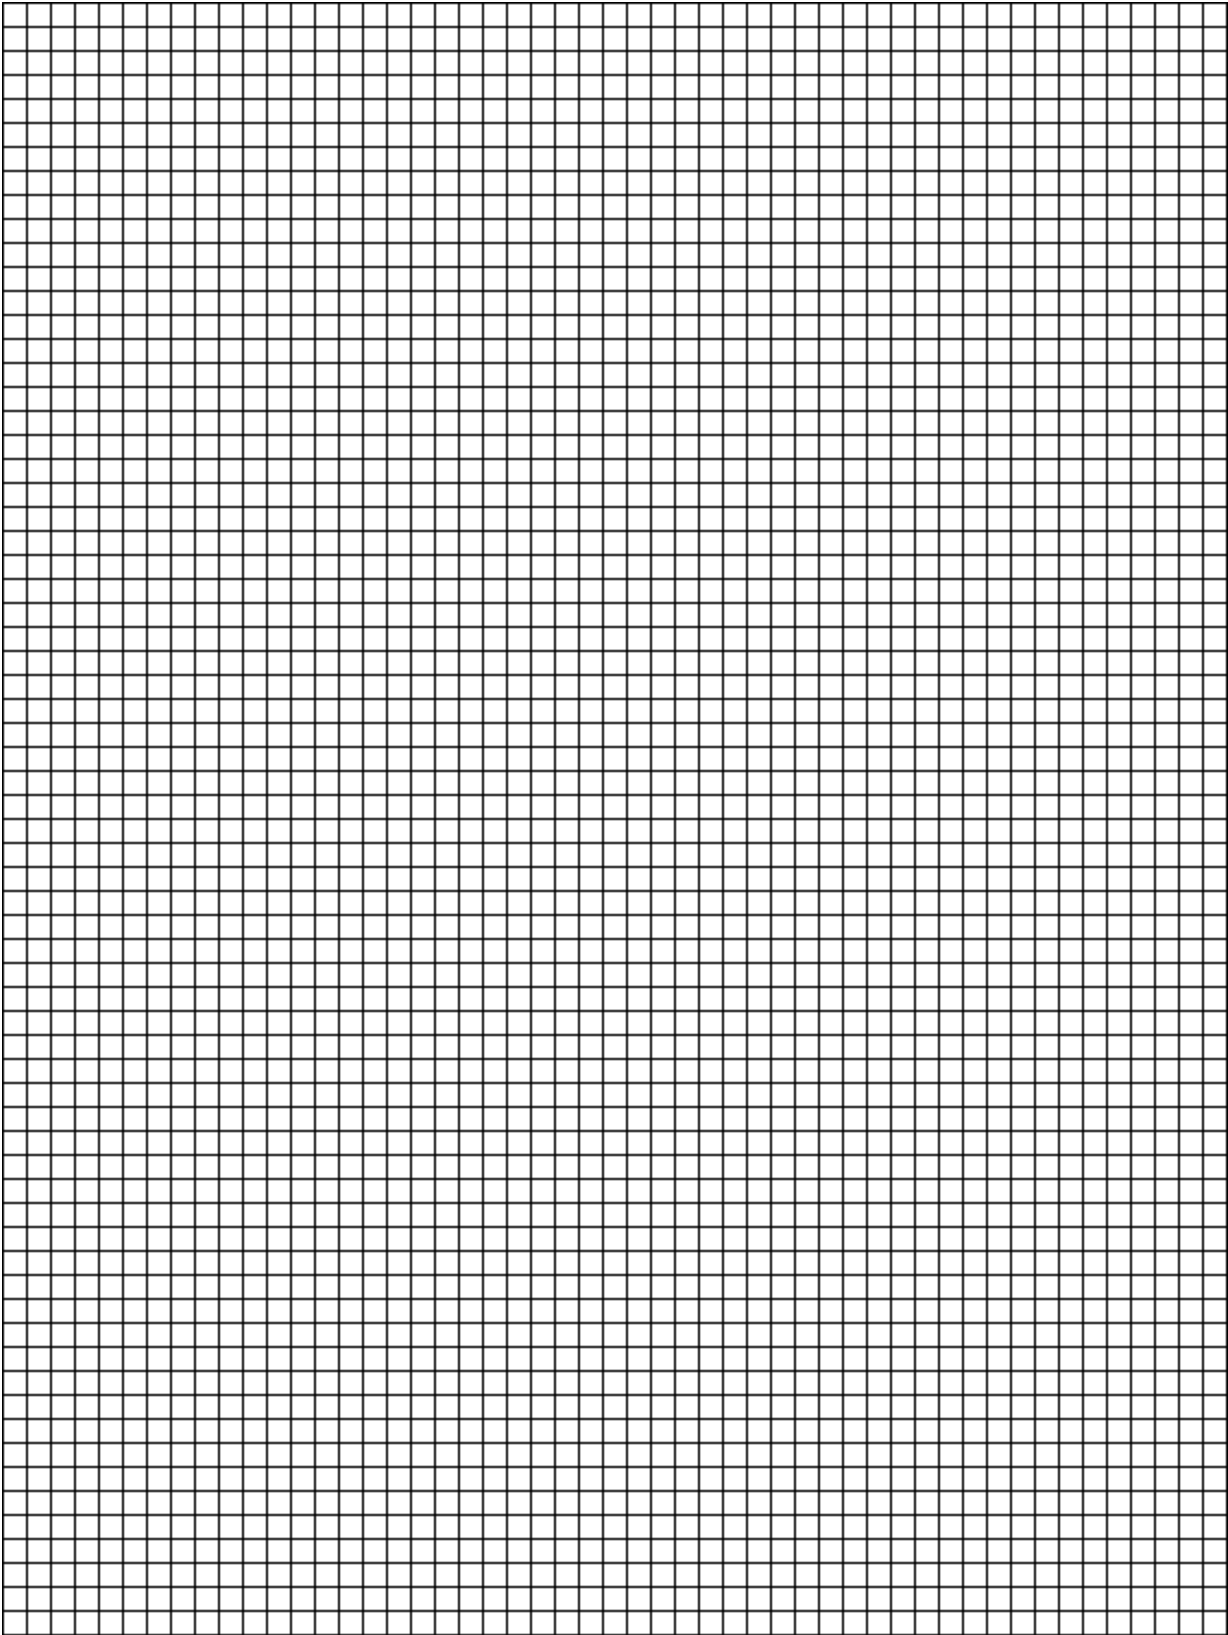

Many of these early newspaper crossword puzzles were small and easily completed. To catch the reader's eye, the layout was often geometrically attractive. This same aesthetic is used in surface pattern design - parquetry, inlays, embroidery, lace, knitting, weaving, and more. It is perfectly reasonable to repurpose these designs for more than one creative endeavor. The grid structure of a small crossword puzzle just might be the perfect motif to fill that small space in a piece of needlework. Examples:

The puzzle, , charted became , and called to mind a butterfly .

The puzzle, , charted became , and called to mind a spider .

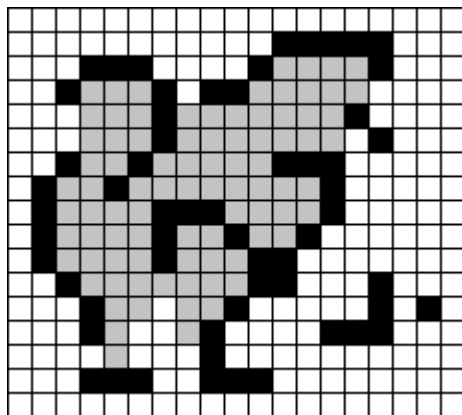

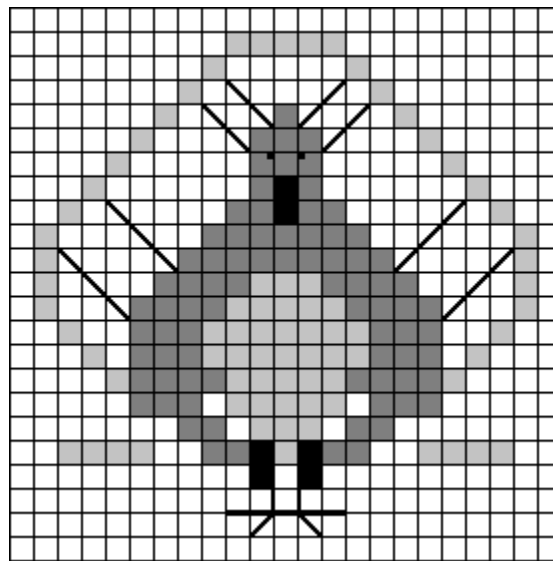

The puzzle, , charted became , and called to mind a Hymenoptera . – Helen Hough
